DEATH SETTLES NEGRO'S CASE

Charged with arson in that he set fire to a house owned by M. J. Patterson a few months ago, Ose Humphreys, a negro, who was released from jail under a $500 bond, died yesterday in North Highlands from a complication of diseases.

The Patterson house was located not far from Five Points, and caught fire and was destroyed, the fire department being unable to successfully cope with the flames. Shortly afterwards Ose Humphreys was arrested charged with setting fire to the house, and committed to jail, where he remained until bond was made. In discussing the death of the negro today, M. J. Patterson, owner of the property, said that there was sufficient evidence to convict the negro, had he not died before the time for trial.

FAIR ISSUES "CHEER UP" CARD

Despite existing conditions pertaining to the cotton situation, officials of the Southeast Alabama Fair Association expect the first annual exhibition to be held in Dothan, October 26 to 31, to be one of the greatest events in the history of Southeast Alabama. The program has been arranged so that there will be a great variety of attractions, that some one of which will appeal to most every individual. The program includes agricultural, live stock, poultry, art exhibitions, and various other subjects of interest to any nothing of the fair.

Fairly good headway is being made at the fair grounds. The agricultural, live stock, poultry, art and commercial buildings have been completed, while the grand stand is under course of construction. Work of grading the race track, this being the last finishing touches, will probably be started this week.

A "cheer up" card has been issued by the association, inviting all to attend the splendid exposition, which will be the first of the kind ever held in Dothan.

MILLER TO USE COTTON SACKS

In order to assist the South in the present low price cotton crisis, the Golden Grain Company, millers and manufacturers of Golden Grain alfalfa feeds, have announced that they have decided to ship all feed stuffs in cotton sacks.

The announcement of the Golden Grain Milling Company, which is a Mr. Louis concern, means that there will be a greater number of cotton sacks used; consequently, more demand for cotton. Of course, this decision alone may not amount to as much when the large cotton crop of the South is considered, but at the same time it is a step in the right direction, and shows a spirit of co-operation.

The following letter has been received by the Chamber of Commerce: "East St. Louis, Ill., Sept. 12, '14. Chamber of Commerce, Dothan, Ala.

"Appreciating the tough conditions caused by the stagnation in the cotton market and in an effort to contribute our mite to relieve the situation, we have decided to take a loan on our buying contracts and will hereafter ship all feeds in cotton sacks.

"Trusting this change will be satisfactory, we are, Yours very truly, Golden Grain Milling Co."

Now that "buy a bale of cotton" is the slogan that is ringing through the land, it is predicted by those in a position to know that the southern women of this modern day will emulate the women of the old south, and will show their patriotism by appearing during the winter and spring in costumes made from cotton fabrics. It is also thought that these gowns from sheer daintiness and beauty will rival any silks or satins ever imported from foreign looms.

THOSE WHO HAVE SEEN THE WAR

At the bright entertainments of the season it will be even a matter of rivalry as to who will be able to wear the prettiest costume fashioned from the white mantle of the south. In connection with the all-absorbing topic of cotton, the exhibit of American silks in Washington is attracting much attention from the world of women. The United States National Museum is exhibiting some novel designs in silk dress goods, which are truly American history, and manufactured by an American firm for American women.

Months ago, when the war clouds first began rolling over Mexico, and conflict threatened to force Americans to originate their own designs for fabrics and costumes, artists were set to work to adapt for present day use the designs and symbols shown by the Aztecs and other early Indian peoples. Mexican designs are the Red Cross. Many of the wounded are not gravely injured, though effectively hors de combat. One sword stroke, another has a ball in his thigh. A young volunteer of the paragon and comprise the Aztec Dragoons tells proudly how a puma in rainbow tones of blue and red of eight men, of whom he was lauded; the colors on peacock-blue; one put to flight last Friday two Kortex—an Aztec hieroglyph—on dark green and satin-striped white taffeta; the Aztec coat-of-arms on navy blue, and an all-over design of the Mexican feathers in shades of blue, green, brown. Other designs are reminders of the Pueblo Indians, one consisting of a rattlesnake symbol printed on Indian red, while another resembles a Navajo rug in which zig-zag stripes and a diamond arrangement of figures appear. It is interesting to realize the modern practice, at use to which these ancient designs have been put, and at the same time to study their historical meaning.—Atlanta Journal.

And let us not forget the German mothers. "Crimy is completely destroyed," said one woman "and in the streets the corpses of the German have been piled up to a height of five yards. That is what they have said." (Here ten lines of the message have been cut out by the censor.) Each is at once boarded by cool-headed nurses and officers of the Red Cross. Many of the wounded are not gravely injured, though effectively hors de combat. One sword stroke, another has a ball in his thigh. A young volunteer of the paragon and comprise the Aztec Dragoons tells proudly how a puma in rainbow tones of blue and red of eight men, of whom he was lauded; the colors on peacock-blue; one put to flight last Friday two Kortex—an Aztec hieroglyph—on dark green and satin-striped white taffeta; the Aztec coat-of-arms on navy blue, and an all-over design of the Mexican feathers in shades of blue, green, brown. It is interesting to realize the modern practice, at use to which these ancient designs have been put, and at the same time to study their historical meaning.—Atlanta Journal.

Some Algerian and Senegalese soldiers are leaning out of one of the end carriages of the train. Several have bandaged heads, others their arms bound up to their shoulders. Most of them seem to be smoking with a prodigious pride long porcelain pipes, which were once the noise of quiet evenings in some Rhine land village.

A swarthy giant, pulling hard at his pipe, evidently to cover the spasms of pain from his wounded hands, tells in broken French, less eloquent than his burning eyes, how he and 17 others of the black troops—of whom France is singularly proud—captured a militallense.

They had been ordered, along with an infantry company, to hold a road bordered by a thicket. Suddenly a column of German Dragoons for German cavalryman) when one discovered them, and opened upon is on foot."

And he ended by explaining that he and his fellows had thrown away their boots before going into action not being used to such encumbrances, but had afterwards taken the boots off some dead Germans "so as not to seem to have lost any of our outfit."
